A special dispatch from London says:

after an exchange of explanations, Sir him of Mr. Bradlaugh's demand. The Speaker then called Mr. Bradlaugh's attention to the resolution arrived at by the House last night, and when the member

Bradlaugh made an elaborate address in support of his right to take a seat. He was frequently cheered by a portion of the Liberais, but these expressions of approval evoked from the Conservative benches loud

LIBOUCHERE'S MOTION. Mr. Labouchere then made a motion to rescind last night's resolution, and, atter a short debate, a division was taken, resulting in an overwhelming Bradlaugh defeat, only thirty-eight members sustaining the only thirty-eight members sustaining the motion, while three hundred and twenty-six voted against it. Premier Gladstone and most of the Ministry voted with the majority; Mr. Chemberlain and Mr. Parnell with the minority. Mr. Bradlaugh thee once more advanced to the table of the House, and, after some parley, the Speaker saked the House to instruct bim as to what course it desired him to pursue toward the "honorable member." There was a short pause, no one wishing to take the initiative. All eyes turned toward the Trastury benches, but not one of the Ministers sury benches, but not one of the Ministers stirred. Cries of "Northcote! Northcote!" Northcote! Northcote! Were raised by the Conservatives, and when the leader of the Opposition rose he was greeted with loud cheers. Mr. Gladstone replied to Northcote's sarcastic thrust, explaining that he thought it more seemly that those who were responsible for beginning the proceedings should conduct them to the close.

The phintiff denied all of his wife's statements. He humorously detailed the progress and culmination of the eccentric courts with that led up to their union. He said: "Struthers's grandson Jem came running into my house, at Unionville, one day and an attempt by Mr. Finnigan and six others to adjourn, the debate proceeded. Mr. Parnell addressed the House, contending against Mr. Bradlaugh being sent to prison. Finally Sir Stafford Northcote's motion was carried by a vote of 274 to 7 to commit Mr. Bradlaugh to prison in the Clock-Tower. He was immediately removed Mr. Bradlaugh and the sergeant-at-arms. While being removed Mr. Bradlaugh and the sergeant-at-arms were accompanied by wite told him before she left that if she rethe sergeant-at-arms were accompanied by a crowd of members to an apartment preliminary to his final incarceration. A large number of members who declined to vote for incarceration withdrew to the lobbies.

Mrs. Remsen was recalled and positively for incarceration withdrew to the lobbies. In case no writ for Northampton is issued in his favor, and is confident of being re-turned triumphantly should a new writ be issued. The minority of seven was com-posed of the five Irish members, including

Mr. Parnell, and two English members. Now that Bradlaugh is safely deposi-ted in the Clock-Tower, people are be-gianing to ask what Parliament will do gianing to ask what Parliament will do with him, for it is evident that he cannot be held a prisoner for the course of his natural life. The problem now before the majority of the House, indeed, is how to set Mr. Bradlaugh at liberty without compromising the dignity of Parliament. The Clock-Tower cannot be turned into a bastile, and may prolongation of imprisonment would make him a popular martyr and make Parliament ridiculous and odious. Some few tanguine Conservatives hope that Mr. Bradlaugh will grow tired of his prison quarters, and will apply for the Chiltern Hundreds, thus allowing Parliament to escape from the consequences of its act. Mr. Gladstone may ask the House to declare the Northampton seat vacant and issue a new writ. This duty vacant and issue a new writ. This duty will fall on Sir Stafford Northcote, and should be carry it out the Conservatives will risk defeat in the House and also at the hustings. However, they are confident of success, and will probably pursue the course Indicated because it is the only logical one Indicated because it is the only logical one in view of the ground they have taken up during the discussion. Mr. Bradlaugh is also confident that should Parliament declare his seat vacant Northampton will again return him triumphantly. He has occupied the day in communicating with friends through the country and in being thoroughly interviewed. A few members called on him in his prison chamber, which is rather gloomy, but commands a view of Palace Yard, so that he can see his brother members pass in and out of the House. bers pass in and out of the House.

Mrs. Remsen gave a detailed bistory of her courtship, marriage, and separation. She tripped lightly to the witness-stand, her checks flushed slightly, and turning boldly to the jury, she shot forth the strange tale with a volubility so startling that for some time the jury and spectators could do nothing but look at her in mute astonishment. "I first met Remsen about two years before I was married," said the witness. "I visited some friends of mine in Bath, who informed me in girlish confidence "I visited some friends of mine in Bath, who informed me in girlish confidence that there was an old widower there who had horses and carriages, and said they would introduce him to me. Like most young girls fond of fun, I consented, and we met at a party at which he was the butt." She went on to say that he seemed smitten at once and followed her about tenaclously. He asked her out to drive, and the next evening she drove out with him, and he proposed to her before with bim, and he proposed to her before they got home. She refused indiguaraly; said that she did not care for him, and that the idea was perfectly preposterous. He followed up his attentions, however, with remarkable and unwelcome tenacity, and finally threatened to commit suicide if he did not marry her. He wrote her all sorts of letters—at one time thirteen a week—to be properly done. Remsen upon his arri-val called her down stairs, and said: "1 have brought you a diamond ring." She asked him why he had done that, as she had plenty of jewelry already and did not require any more, but not having a solitaire she thought it very kind of him. She examined the ring and was rather doubtful about i's appearance, but not being familiar

AT AUCTION.—In execution of a certain deed of trust dated 19th September, 1878, and duly recorded in Richmond Chancery Court, D. B. 113 C. page 171. I will offer for sale, upon the premiser, on WEDNESDAY the 30th day of June, 1880, at 6 o'clock P. M., being required so to do by the holder of the note secured thereby, default having been made in the payment of the same, the PROPERTY above described. The LOT fronts 70 feet at the north line of Chim street, and runs back on Pine street 125 feet, and is laid off with fine shrubbery. &c. The HOUSE is one of the best in that locality, and is now occupied by a good tenant, and vielding a fair rentai. The lot will be subdivided on the day of sale if desired. This offers a good opportunity to purchase good eroperty in a nelghborhood that is rapidly improving, and which is bound to enhance in value.

Terms: Whilst the deed requires each as to expenses of sale and sufficiency to pay off a note of $1.500, with all costs, &c., thereon, it is probable that more liberal terms will be given at sale.
